1 I. INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

2 On January 25, 2016, over a year after this litigation first began, four months after the 3 amendment deadline, and just days after submitting a jointly-negotiated Amended Scheduling 4 Order to the Court for approval, Defendant Arista Networks, Inc. (“Arista”) filed a motion for 5 leave to add antitrust counterclaims against Plaintiff Cisco Systems, Inc. (“Cisco”) (Dkt. 163). As 6 Arista admits, the motion is governed by Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16 because it comes 7 long after the Courts’ deadline to amend any pleadings. Rule 16(b)(4) states that “[a] schedule 8 may be modified only for good cause and with the judge’s consent.” “Good cause” primarily 9 comes down to the movant’s diligence in complying with the schedule, although prejudice to the 10 non-movant is an independently sufficient basis to deny motion. Arista was not diligent here, and 11 its request would severely prejudice Cisco.

12 Arista’s counterclaims assert two basic liability theories against Cisco: that it committed 13 an allegedly anticompetitive “about face” with respect to the intellectual property covering its 14 command-line interface (“CLI”) for Ethernet switching products, and that it supposedly “bundled” 15 its SMARTnet service with Cisco products in an anticompetitive way.¹ Although Arista half-16 heartedly claims that it was only able to recently comprehend these counterclaims, that is 17 demonstrably untrue. The alleged “about face” about which Arista complains began, at the latest, 18 when Cisco filed this lawsuit in December 2014. And Cisco’s SMARTnet service and pricing 19 plans have long been used in the market; even longer than this lawsuit.

20 Because the parties are long past the amendment deadline, Arista’s motion is governed by 21 Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16, which requires that the movant establish “good cause” for 22 their late request. As noted above, “good cause” in the Rule 16 context focuses on the movant’s 23 diligence in pursuing the basis for their amendment. Arista cannot make such a showing here. It 24 not only sat on the facts underlying its proposed counterclaims for years, but the majority of the

 26 ¹ Arista also alleges that Cisco committed unspecific “intimidation tactics” against consumers 27 in the marketplace, but does not provide details about those “tactics.” If and when necessary, 28 Cisco will respond to the substance of these claims, but notes for now that they are spurious, unsubstantiated, and immaterial to the current motion.

1 few documents it cites in the proposed counterclaims were produced well before the amendment 2 deadline. More troubling, Arista also actively participated in negotiating and submitting the 3 currently-operative Amended Scheduling Order with apparent full knowledge that it intended to 4 seek this relief only days after the Court entered the new schedule the parties jointly proposed.
 5 Under applicable law, this lack of diligence is the end of the inquiry.

6 But even if Arista’s failure to diligently pursue the amendment were not dispositive, the 7 prejudice Cisco would suffer if the Court grants the motion is severe. Since the beginning of this 8 case, Cisco has consistently emphasized its need to move expeditiously due to the severe and 9 ongoing harm caused by Arista’s copyright and patent infringement. As the Court has noted, any 10 claims brought in this case will be tried together, and the current trial dates beginning in 11 November 2016 are insufficient to handle both Cisco’s intellectual property claims and Arista’s 12 proposed antitrust counterclaims. The next trial dates the Court has available begin in February 13 2018, a year and a half later. Given that this case is already more than a year old and involves 14 allegations that Arista has and continues to slavishly copy Cisco’s intellectual property (and 15 thereby gain ill-gotten sales in the market), such an additional delay is clearly prejudicial because 16 it threatens—and seems explicitly designed—to derail or unreasonably slow down the resolution 17 of Cisco’s pending copyright and patent infringement claims. This is particularly problematic 18 given Arista’s failure to abide by its diligence obligations.

19 For these reasons, Cisco respectfully requests that the Court deny Arista’s motion and 20 require it to file its antitrust claims, if at all, in a separate action. Arista has effectively conceded 21 that is the proper course, as it noted in its motion that it is perfectly willing to conduct a separate 22 trial on its antitrust claims (if they proceed that far), governed by separate discovery deadlines and 23 a separate schedule. Cisco agrees, so long as those claims proceed separately (although it is 24 willing to use overlapping discovery from this case wherever appropriate).

25 II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

26 On December 5, 2014, Cisco filed this lawsuit against Arista due to the latter’s blatant and 27 extensive copying of Cisco’s copyrighted and patented CLI. The complaint explicitly noted the 28 various pieces of intellectual property Cisco believes it owns and that Arista infringed. (See

1 generally Dkt. 1 at ¶¶ 6, 24-39, 51-57.) In the fourteen months since, the parties have briefed a 2 motion to dismiss, coordinated on an initial Joint Case Management Statement (which included a 3 preliminary discovery plan), produced millions of pages of documents, conducted numerous 4 depositions, and appeared before the Court multiple times. More recently, they negotiated an 5 extension to the discovery schedule after the Court pushed back the trial date by several months at 6 Arista's urging, and submitted Amended Scheduling Orders to the Court on January 14 and 19, 7 2016. (Dkts. 156 & 159.) Throughout that entire negotiation process, Arista never indicated (until 8 it filed the present motion) that it intended to add any antitrust counterclaims to this case.

9 When the parties negotiated the initial case schedule, the Court required them to amend 10 their pleadings and claims, if at all, by September 7, 2015. (Dkt. 51.) Arista never objected to this 11 deadline, nor did it ever seek to move the deadline in any way. Even when the parties negotiated 12 the more recent Amended Scheduling Order—including after the attorneys who now apparently 13 will run the antitrust claims filed appearances in this case in November 2015, (see Dkts. 104 & 14 105)—Arista never indicated that it wished to move back or otherwise alter the date for amending 15 pleadings. Meanwhile, the parties continued to conduct discovery according to the originally-16 contemplated scope of the claims and defenses.

17 At the recent January 28, 2016 Case Management Conference, the Court indicated that it 18 would not conduct two separate trials in a single case. (Dkt. 179 (Jan. 28, 2016 Hr'g Tr.) at 13:18-19 20.) Practically speaking, that means the Court would need to move back the November 21, 2016 20 trial date on Cisco's copyright and patent infringement claims until at least February 2018 (a year 21 and a half later), all in order to accommodate counterclaims Arista never mentioned until the last 22 instant. (Id. at 14:8-9.)

23 This delay is particularly problematic because, regardless of the liability theory alleged, 24 Arista does not indicate how it was at all diligent in seeking to comply with the schedule. The 25 proposed counterclaims are based on old facts long known to Arista, and Arista identifies no
 26 reason why it was unable to bring these claims earlier in the case. (See generally Mot.)

27 For example, Arista accuses Cisco of committing a supposed "about face" regarding 28 intellectual property that Cisco allegedly committed to the public domain. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 33.) That

1 “about face” included Cisco’s assertion that it owned and could exclude its competitors from using 2 its CLI. (Id. ¶ 30-32.) According to Arista’s explicit allegations in the counterclaims, Cisco’s 3 anticompetitive scheme included copyright and patent assertions over its CLI; i.e., this lawsuit.
 4 (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 91 (“One of the ways Cisco carried out its policy reversal was to announce
 5 to the industry that it claimed copyright infringement from Arista’s use of 514 CLI
 6 commands...and in contrast to its years of representations, Cisco even sought injunctive relief
 7 against the use of those commands.”). Moreover, the first time Arista made such an allegation 8 was in its February 13, 2015 Answer to Cisco’s original Complaint in this lawsuit. (See Dkt. 36, 9 at 1 (“Until December 2014, Cisco never suggested that it claimed copyright protection in the set 10 of functional commands that most of the industry uses.”).)

11 Similarly, Arista accuses Cisco of antitrust violations relating to its SMARTnet service 12 pricing, but neither alleges that it was unaware of SMARTnet pricing until only recently, or that 13 the SMARTnet service just recently came into being. (See Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 97-109.) In truth, 14 SMARTnet has been around for the better part of a decade [REDACTED]

15 [REDACTED] See, e.g., Declaration of Matthew 16 D. Cannon dated February 8, 2016, Ex. A [REDACTED]

17 [REDACTED]

18 III. LEGAL STANDARD

19 As Arista concedes (because it must), Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 16 governs this 20 motion, because it comes long after the Court’s deadline for amendments to the pleadings. See 21 Mot. at 3; see also Zamora v. City of San Francisco, 2013 WL 4529553, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 26, 22 2013) (finding that Rule 16’s more stringent rules govern attempts to amend “after the deadline set 23 forth in a court’s scheduling order”); Pierce v. Sprouts Café, Inc., 2010 WL 3069312, at *1 (E.D.
 24 Cal. Aug. 3, 2010) (“Once the Court has entered a pretrial scheduling order, the standards of Rule 25 16 rather than Rule 15 govern amendment of the pleadings.”). Arista’s vague citations to Rule 15
 26 (Mot. at 3-4) thus have no application here. See Johnson v. Mammoth Recreations, Inc., 975 F.2d 27 604, 610 (9th Cir. 1992) (“Disregard of the [scheduling] order would undermine the court’s ability 28 to control its docket, disrupt the agreed-upon course of the litigation, and reward the indolent and

1 the cavalier. Rule 16 was drafted to prevent this situation and its standards may not be short-2 circuited by an appeal to those of Rule 15.”).

3 Rule 16 requires that a movant establish “good cause” for their requested amendment to 4 the scheduling order. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(4). Unlike Rule 15(a)’s liberal policy toward 5 amendment, “which focuses on the bad faith of the party seeking to interpose an amendment and 6 the prejudice to the opposing party,” Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609, Rule 16’s “good cause” standard 7 “primarily considers the diligence of the party seeking amendment.” Id.; see also Fed. R. Civ. P.
 8 advisory committee’s notes (1983 amendments). If the moving party was not diligent, the 9 inquiry should end. Kuschner v. Nationwide Credit, Inc., 256 F.R.D. 684, 687 (E.D. Cal. 2009)
 10 (emphasis added) (citing Zivkovic v. S. Cal. Edison Co., 302 F.3d 1080, 1087 (9th Cir. 2002)). A 11 party can show good cause by establishing:

12 (1) that [it] was diligent in assisting the court in creating a workable Rule 16 13 order; (2) that [its] noncompliance with a Rule 16 deadline occurred or will not 14 occur, notwithstanding [its] diligent efforts to comply, because of the 15 development of matters which could not have been reasonably foreseen or anticipated at the time of the Rule 16 scheduling conference; and (3) that [it] was diligent in seeking amendment of the Rule 16 order, once it became apparent that [it] could not comply with the order.

16 Jackson v. Laureate, Inc., 186 F.R.D. 605, 608 (E.D. Cal. 1999) (citing Johnson v. Mammoth 17 Recreations, Inc., 975 F.2d 604, 609 (9th Cir. 1992); *In re San Juan Dupont Plaza Hotel Fire
 18 Litig.*, 111 F.3d 220, 228 (1st Cir. 1997); and Eckert Cold Storage, Inc. v. Behl, 943 F. Supp.
 19 1230, 1233 (E.D. Cal. 1996)) (internal citations omitted). “[C]arelessness is not compatible with a 20 finding of diligence and offers no reason for a grant of relief.” Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609.

21 If the movant is able to establish diligence, prejudice to the non-movant is an additional, 22 independently sufficient—although not necessary—reason to deny the Rule 16 motion. See id.
 23 (noting that the degree and existence of prejudice to the non-movant may provide additional 24 reasons to deny the motion, but that prejudice is secondary to the diligence inquiry). Prejudice is a 25 case-specific question, but it includes (among other things) delay to the trial, see, e.g., Wells Fargo 26 Bank, N.A. v. Renz, 2010 WL 2867615, at *3 (N.D. Cal. July 20, 2010) (denying motion to amend 27 under Rule 15’s more lenient standard because it would delay the trial and thus prejudice the 28 parties); Harris v. Vector Mktg. Corp., 2009 WL 3710696, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 4, 2009) (same,

1 where proposed amendment would “derail the Court’s scheduling order”), and delay caused by 2 additional discovery. See Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 194 F.3d 980, 986
 3 (9th Cir. 1999); Harris, 2009 WL 3710696, at *2.

4 For the reasons discussed below, Arista satisfies neither of these stringent requirements.²

5 IV. ARGUMENT

6 Arista utterly fails to establish its diligence in bringing the current motion, which alone
 7 necessitates denial. However, given the motion’s timing, and in light of the Court’s trial schedule, 8 the motion also severely prejudices Cisco in this now year-old intellectual property theft dispute.

9 A. Arista Was Not Diligent

10 As noted above, the primary basis on which Arista asserts its counterclaims are two fact 11 patterns that were not only reasonably foreseeable, but were actually known and apparent to 12 Arista for years. The first is the supposed “about face” Cisco made with respect to its CLI 13 intellectual property. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 33.) According to Arista, Cisco for years effectively 14 committed its intellectual property to the public domain and then only made an about face with 15 respect to that intellectual property once it was faced with competition from Arista. (See, e.g., 16 Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 25-31.) Putting aside for the moment that this is a fabrication and refuted in 17 multiple, diverse ways by Arista’s own witnesses and documents in this case, the factual predicate
 18 underlying Arista’s claim is that, by asserting intellectual property rights over its CLI, Cisco
 19 somehow committed an antitrust violation. (See, e.g., Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 111-112, 150.)³

21 ² Although Arista’s antitrust claims are also futile, that is a question under Rule 15 and thus 22 not at issue here. When and if appropriate, Cisco will address the futility—i.e., implausibility and 23 meritless nature—of Arista’s claims in a proper motion to dismiss.

24 ³ In response to this point, Arista may cite certain of its proposed counterclaim allegations 25 aimed at circumventing the inevitable problems that arise when a plaintiff alleges antitrust 26 violations from an intellectual property holder asserting that property in the market. (Dkt. 162-6 27 ¶¶ 130-31); cf. Sosa v. DIRECTV, Inc., 437 F.3d 923, 929-30 (9th Cir. 2006) (noting that 28 invocations of intellectual property rights are typically immunized from the antitrust laws under the Noerr-Pennington doctrine, and that these protections extend to pre-litigation assertions of intellectual property ownership and infringement). Cisco will address these allegations at the proper point, but they cannot avoid the simple conclusion that this very lawsuit is a core example of the allegedly “improper” intellectual property assertions of which Arista complains.

1 Even assuming that could somehow be true, there is a clear point in time at which the basis
 2 for such a claim should have been readily apparent: December 5, 2014. That is the date Cisco
 3 filed this lawsuit against Arista, and is the date on which Cisco made abundantly clear that it 4 would not permit Arista to infringe its CLI intellectual property. (See, e.g., Dkt. 1 ¶ 42-44, 50-54, 5 Prayer for Relief ¶ 4.) Arista does not claim that it was unaware of these facts, nor could it 6 because Cisco's assertion of copyright ownership and its pursuit of injunctive relief related to 7 Arista's copyright infringement is one of the core bases for the counterclaims. (See Dkt. 162-6 ¶ 8 91 ("One of the ways Cisco carried out its policy reversal was to announce to the industry that it 9 claimed copyright infringement from Arista's use of 514 CLI commands...and in contrast to its 10 years of representations, Cisco even sought injunctive relief against the use of those commands.").
 11 Moreover, although Arista uses documents obtained during discovery in this case to bolster its 12 allegations, (Dkt. 162-6 at Exs. A-H), the vast majority of those were produced to Arista long 13 before its motion and most before the deadline for amendments to the pleadings. (See, e.g., Dkt.
 14 162-6 at Exs. A, C, D, F (produced in related proceedings between Cisco and Arista before the 15 ITC, and in this matter on July 21, 2015); and at Exs, E and H (produced in related ITC 16 proceedings, and in this matter on September 25, 2015). And, in any event, Arista first alleged the 17 supposed "about face" in February 2015, when it answered Cisco's initial Complaint in this 18 action. (See Dkt. 36, at 1 ("Until December 2014, Cisco never suggested that it claimed copyright 19 protection in the set of functional commands that most of the industry uses.")).

20 Thus, even if Arista had been somehow unaware during multiple litigations with Cisco that 21 the latter was asserting intellectual property rights over its CLI, it had more than ample 22 opportunity to seek to add the "about face" counterclaim before the Court's scheduled deadline.

23 Moving to the other primary liability theory—Cisco's alleged "bundling" of SMARTnet
 24 with Cisco switches—Arista never claims that it was unaware of the allegedly anticompetitive 25 bundling activity before the amendment deadline. The bundling allegations simply identify a 26 service that Cisco provides to its customers and claim that Cisco's pricing methodology for that 27 service somehow forecloses competition. (Dkt. 162-6 ¶¶ 33-39.) Arista does not claim that this is 28 a new practice or that it is premised on "new" facts Arista just learned, nor does it identify any

1 efforts to diligently pursue this liability theory before the Rule 16 deadline. (Id.) Moreover, 2 Arista cites no documents from discovery in this case for its bundling theory, further failing to 3 explain why it just now brings the claim. [REDACTED]

4 [REDACTED] See Cannon Decl., Ex. A.

5 For these reasons, Arista completely fails to establish that it was diligent in pursuing the 6 newly-proposed claims. This is unsurprising given that, over one year before it brought its 7 motion, Arista was aware of the core facts underlying at least its CLI-related antitrust claims.
 8 Such unexplained delay is the antithesis of diligence and is alone a reason to deny the motion. See 9 Johnson, 975 F.2d at 609 (“If [moving] party was not diligent, the inquiry should end.”); Rodarte 10 v. Alameda Cty., 2015 WL 5440788, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 15, 2015) (finding plaintiff was not 11 diligent in pursuing amendment where, even accepting that the need to amend only became clear 12 at summary judgment, Plaintiff did not seek amendment for an unexplained two more months).

13 This, however, is not where Arista’s lack of diligence ends. Arista must also show that it 14 was diligent in “assisting the court in creating a workable Rule 16 order,” and that 15 “notwithstanding its diligent efforts to comply, because of the development of matters which 16 could not have been reasonably foreseen or anticipated at the time of the Rule 16 scheduling 17 conference.” Jackson, 186 F.R.D. at 608. The parties recently spent weeks negotiating an 18 Amended Scheduling Order in this case. They then presented that Order to the Court for approval, 19 which, after some follow up regarding Daubert-related dates, the Court granted. (Dkt. 160.)

20 Not once during the discussions over the Amended Scheduling Order did Arista’s lawyers 21 ever mention that they might want to bring antitrust counterclaims. (Dkts. 156 (Joint Stipulation 22 Amending Scheduling Order, dated January 14, 2016) & 159 (Joint Stipulation Amending 23 Scheduling Order, dated January 19, 2016).) Yet, only six days following the Court’s entry of that 24 Order, Arista suddenly sought leave to file a 153-paragraph, 55-page antitrust complaint that those 25 same lawyers admit will greatly expand the scope of discovery. (Mot. at 1, dated January 25, 26 2016.) Arista cannot seriously claim that it was unable to put Cisco and the Court on notice 27 earlier that it might bring these claims, particularly because its antitrust lawyers appeared in the 28 case two months earlier, in November of last year. (See Dkts. 104 & 105; see also Mot. at 5

1 (noting that Arista retained antitrust counsel in November 2015).)⁴ Nor is there any good 2 explanation for why Arista remained silent on the amendment issue while negotiating—at 3 length—an Amended Scheduling Order for the broader case. This, again, is the opposite of 4 diligence. See Integrated Storage Consulting Servs., Inc. v. NetApp, Inc., 2014 WL 6816907, at 5 *2 (N.D. Cal. Dec. 3, 2014) (“[N]ot only must parties participate from the outset in creating a 6 workable Rule 16 scheduling order but they must also diligently attempt to adhere to that schedule 7 throughout the subsequent course of the litigation.”).

8 B. Amending the Case Schedule Now Would Prejudice Cisco

9 Rule 16 places so much emphasis on diligence because unjustifiably late requests to amend 10 a case schedule create massive inefficiencies and disruption. See Johnson, 975 F.2d at 610. But, 11 as previously noted, prejudice in the face of diligence still acts as an additional, independent basis 12 to deny a Rule 16 motion. Id. at 609.

13 Here, the parties are scheduled to begin trial on Cisco’s affirmative claims in November 14 2016, less than ten months from now. The parties have scheduled two weeks to address Cisco’s 15 claims and expect that they will need to use all of that time to adequately present their respective 16 cases. (Dkt. 106 (11/5/2015 Hr’g Tr.) at 27:3-14.) They are currently in the midst of heavy 17 discovery, only some of which Arista believes overlaps with its new counterclaims. (See Mot. at 1 18 (“Discovery into Arista’s antitrust claims will overlap to some extent with discovery into Cisco’s 19 copyright infringement claims...”).

20 Notably, the current trial date is the second such date the Court set in this case, having 21 continued the first at Arista’s request due to its assertion that it needed to conduct further 22 discovery. (Dkt. 132.) At the time the Court did so, it provided the date in consultation with both 23 parties and then asked them to work out the details for the extended discovery schedule. (See Dkt.
 24 145 (Dec. 3, 2015 Hr’g Tr.) at 56-62.) But the Court also did so by noting that moving the date by 25 only a few weeks would likely yield very little prejudice, whereas a year and a half delay would be

26
 27 ⁴ Notably, Arista claims that it located the documents cited in its counterclaims in November.
 28 (Mot. at 5.) It does not similarly claim that it first learned the alleged facts in November. (Id.)

1 something altogether different. (Id. at 42:15:21.) Arista neither indicated to the Court nor Cisco
 2 at that time (or before filing this motion) that it would need to conduct antitrust-related discovery 3 on the new schedule, despite that it had already retained antitrust counsel in November (see Mot.
 4 at 5). Nor did it indicate that it would need to try antitrust counterclaims alongside Cisco's
 5 affirmative intellectual property infringement claims. (See Dkts. 93, 108, 127.)

6 Shortly after Arista filed this motion, the parties held a Case Management Conference 7 before the Court on January 28, 2016. At that time, the Court noted it would not be inclined to 8 separately try the parties' respective claims, and that the counterclaims would drastically increase 9 the complexity of the overall dispute. (Jan. 28, 2016 Hr'g Tr. at 13:11-22.) Because of this, the 10 current trial schedule would be insufficient, because the Court has not reserved an adequate 11 amount of time to resolve a dispute of that breadth. (Id.) Furthermore, the Court is unable to 12 schedule a new trial date long enough to accommodate both sets of claims until at least February 13 2018, (id. at 14:8-15), which would delay Cisco's day in court by at least a year and a half, and 14 this in a case where the trial date has already been pushed back due to Arista's efforts.

15 Given the clarity the Court provided on how the amendment would affect the case
 16 schedule, one of the primary bases on which Arista bases its motion—the supposed lack of delay 17 caused by the requested amendment, (see Mot. at 1-2 (“Consequently, Arista's motion will not 18 prejudice Cisco, nor delay the trial of this action.”) (emphasis added))—is fundamentally 19 incorrect. As such, even on Arista's own logic, Cisco would be severely prejudiced if the Court 20 granted the motion. See Renz, 2010 WL 2867615, at *3 (delay of trial constituted prejudice 21 sufficient to deny motion to amend); Harris, 2009 WL 3710696, at *2 (same, where proposed 22 amendment would “derail the Court's scheduling order”); cf. also Dkt. 145 at 42:15-21 (noting 23 that, unlike a year and a half delay, a delay of a matter of weeks would cause little prejudice).
 24 Even had Arista been at all diligent with seeking amendment, this provides an independent and 25 equally compelling reason to deny the motion.

26 V. CONCLUSION

27 For all of the above reasons, Cisco respectfully requests that the Court deny Arista's 28 motion for leave and require it to file its antitrust claims, if at all, in a separate lawsuit.
